

History of the ABLE Act in Arizona

2018 Update

What? The Achieving a Better Life Experience (ABLE) Act (H.R. 647), a bipartisan bill passed on December 19, 2014, amends the federal tax code to allow Section 529 tax-exempt savings accounts for disability-related expenses. This allows earnings to grow tax deferred and withdrawn tax free when used for qualified disability expenses. Account contributions are limited to $15,000 per year. Contributions would not count against someone's eligibility for food stamps or the Arizona Health Care Cost Containment System, better known as AHCCCS. Once an ABLE account reaches $100,000, however, Security Supplemental Insurance (SSI) or Social Security Disability Insurance (SSDI) payments will be suspended until the account falls back under $100,000.

Some states are opting to cap assets at more than $400,000. In Arizona, the cap will be $462,000 for 2018 and will likely rise in future years. These accounts are owned by the person with a disability with an age of onset of disability before 26, although diagnosis can occur later in life.

One program's benefits aren't sheltered forever. When an ABLE account beneficiary dies, the state's Medicaid program, which in Arizona is under AHCCCS, can file a claim to receive reimbursement of some expenses if the state paid for the account owner's medical costs incurred after the account was opened.

Why? Millions of individuals with disabilities and their families depend on a wide variety of public benefits for income, health care, and food and housing assistance, but these individuals are ineligible for benefits if they have more than $2,000 cash savings and retirement funds. However, the ABLE Act recognizes the significant costs of disability, including raising a child with significant disabilities, and the costs of accessible housing and transportation, personal assistance services, and assistive technology. Furthermore, many caregivers worry about providing for the future of their children with disabilities.

There was a perceived inequity among bipartisan Congress members regarding children with and without disabilities that made the enactment of this new tax benefit possible. Many children without disabilities benefit from tax-favored savings accounts that facilitate saving for higher education and promoting brighter futures.

But parents with children with significant disabilities do not similarly benefit, although future expenses of adults with significant disabilities are high. As stated by one of the legislation's co-sponsors: "No longer would individuals with disabilities have to stand aside and watch others use IRS-sanctioned tools to lay the groundwork for a brighter future."

In 2015, the Arizona Developmental Disabilities Planning Council asked people with disabilities if they could set up a tax-free savings account with their own money they could continue to add and take money out at any time (tax-free), would they do it? – 76 percent replied yes. Throughout the state, the Act could potentially benefit more than 80,000 individuals with developmental disabilities and their families. Additionally, Arizona residents with other physical disabilities and special health care needs with an onset before age 26 could potentially benefit, as well.

Arizona Actions? Arizona legislators, led by Representative John Allen, passed a state version of the ABLE Act, allotting $240,000 to set up the program's infrastructure. On May 12, 2016, Governor Doug Ducey signed HB2388 into law, which directs the Arizona Department of Economic Security (DES) to administer the program alongside a designated financial institution. The Governor's Office appointed members to an ABLE Act Oversight Committee in mid-2017.

DES hired an executive director in mid-2017, Brittaney Chipley, to lead the program in Arizona, dubbed AZ ABLE. The statewide program launched March 5, 2018 at a press conference at the Arizona State Capitol. The State of Ohio's STABLE Accounts consortium, backed by Intuition ABLE Solutions, LLC, serves as the program administrator after inking a contract with DES.

Arizonans can open an AZ ABLE account at <https://az-able.com/>. Residents can also open ABLE accounts in other states that have selected to allow nationwide enrollment. The ABLE National Resource Center reports on current programs that allow out-of-state enrollment.

For more information on the AZ ABLE program, visit the AZ ABLE website or contact Brittaney Chipley, Executive Director of the AZ ABLE program: (602) 771-0246 or via email at bchipley@azdes.gov