Working with students with challenging behaviors

Thursday, March 31, 2016

9:00 am to 1:00 pm

Ability 360 Center

(Conference rooms 1&2)

5025 East Washington Street.

Phoenix, Arizona

Do you have questions about Arizona's new Restraint & Seclusion Law?

Do you have questions about working with students with challenging behaviors?

Do you have questions about discipline, suspension and expulsion of student's disabilities?

Do you have questions about Positive Behavior Intervention and Supports (PBIS)?

Well, let's get some answers!

The Arizona Center for Disability Law in collaboration with Daniel Davidson, PhD, BCBA-D with the Institute for Human Development at Northern Arizona University will be conducting training for parents and interested individuals to answer these questions and more. This free training will provide information on the recently passed state law limiting the use of restraint or seclusion in Arizona schools. The training will also provide an overview of the use of Positive Behavior Supports and Interventions, as well as discussing issues relating to discipline, suspension and expulsion of students with disabilities. In addition, the training will provide parents with practical advice and strategies for developing self-advocacy skills.
